(一) The only common kind of vehicle that doesn't pollute the environment is the bicycle. If everyone rode bicycles, cities would be cleaner and quieter. So a new program in Amsterdam hopes to encourage the use of bikes by providing them free for the public. 750 high-tech white bikes are being placed in racks around the city and riders use special cards to take them off the racks. Each bike can be used for up to thirty minutes.

The white bikes have a unique design and each has a computer chip installed. One reason for all of the high technology is to prevent Amsterdam's skillful thieves from stealing the bikes. The chips allow them to be tracked, and the unique design makes it impractical to steal them for parts. The racks are also reinforced. If the bikes don't get stolen and the program is successful, it will set an example for cities all over the world.

The service charge is added directly to your bill. You don't have to calculate it yourself. But with tips, you have more control over the amount.
