III. 閱讀測驗(36~40 題，共 5 題)

Many people around the world are becoming more aware of the importance of protecting the environment. One simple but effective way to help is by sorting garbage at home. In Taiwan, residents are required to separate their waste into different categories, such as general trash, recyclables, and food waste.

Recyclable items include paper, plastic bottles, glass, and metal cans. These materials can be collected and made into new products, which helps reduce the amount of waste sent to landfills. Food waste, such as fruit and vegetable peels, can be turned into compost, which can then be used to improve soil quality in parks and gardens. Sorting garbage correctly does take some extra time and effort, but the benefits are clear. It helps protect natural resources, reduces pollution, and saves energy. Some cities even offer rewards to encourage residents to recycle more actively.

Small habits can make a big difference. Taking public transportation instead of driving, bringing your own shopping bag, and choosing products with less packaging are all easy steps that anyone can take. If everyone does their part, together we can create a better environment for future generations.
